EREMURUS

(Foxtail Lilies)

True aristocrats of the garden are the Eremurus or Foxtail Lilies. Coming as they do from the desert region of Turkestan, these Desert Candles are always objects of curiosity in American gardens. They are hardy and dependable, making a spectacular show from late May through June, and they come back year after year. Plant 6 inches deep in rich, porous, loamy soil. They require sunny, well-drained locations. They are best planted in the fall, and then mulched over winter with straw or any other material of similar nature. The flower spikes, often 6 or more feet tall, rise like great asparagus tips from a mass of yucca-like foilage. The roots multiply rapidly, and clumps of Desert Candles make an imposing mass in the shrubbery border or the perennial garden. The foilage disappears after the flowers, and annuals may be planted close to them to fill the vacant space. They are much more effective when planted in groups of not less than three, and more whenever possible. It is no wonder these plants are expensive when you consider that it takes five years to grow one to blooming size. Those we offer are five years old or more, and are of blooming size.

SHELFORD HYBRIDS

GRAF-MELON

A glorious daylily, with a warm apricot-melon color deep in its throat, in the stamens and underlining its petals. The petals are a pale, buttery-soft peach color, with a faint over-glaze of the apricot-melon which gives it an ethereal quality and an iridescence that shades into mauve in certain lighting.

One's immediate impression is that of warm, soft beauty and the exquisite luminous flower is of gracious beauty, very feminine, very dignified, utterly lovely.

If one looks closely at the edge of the petals, one will notice their delicate lavender-pink which is also prominent in the mid-rib.

The flowers are large and wide-petaled, of most perfect form averaging 6 inches across. Scapes are three to four feet in height and are loaded with buds which give a succession of bloom from about the first of July to early August.

When seen for the first time, visitors invariably exclaim "Exquisite"!
